Re: U.S.A. v. Richard J. Harley, 3:CR-12-224

Dear Mr. Young:

Please find enclosed a DVD which contains the paper items seized during the execution of the search warrant at Harley's residence. The password is I9uMQiMsq6Nq. The DVD contains a Concordance database, as well as image and OCR load files for IPRO, which allows word search capabilities. We cannot, however, provide you the IPRO software as it is licensed. The DVD also contains individual .tif files under the Images folder where you can view the items.

The electronically stored information has not been processed yet, but I will provide you a similar DVD when it is completed. The originals of all items are available at the FBI office in Scranton.

Re: U.S.A. v. Richard J. Harley
U.S.D.C. Criminal No. 3:CR-12-224

Dear Mr. Ruzzo:

As a follow up to my discovery letters of December 12, 2012, and December 31, 2012 to Hervery Young (which you indicated you received) and our discovery meeting on January 30, 2013, please be advised the electronic data that was processed at DOJ's Litigation Technology Support Center (LTSC) is now available to you. Please contact Kathy Enders, our Litigation Support Specialist, at (717) 221-4482, and she can explain how to go about receiving this information. I believe you will have to provide her with a sufficiently-sized portable hard drive to access the data. She can fill you in on the details.

Also enclosed is a DVD of the Jencks/Brady material accumulated to date in this case which you inspected on January 30, 2013. The documents have been redacted to exclude personal identifying information. The DVD is similar in format to the one I previously attached to my December 31, 2012 letter which had the paper items from the search warrant on it. Those paper items are now back in the FBI office in Scranton.

Finally, enclosed is report from an art appraiser related to the "art" work Mr. Harley told his victims was worth millions of dollars.

SAMUEL T. FREEMAN II
CHAIRMAN

FREEMAN'S
AUCTIONEERS & APPRAISERS SINCE 1805

Dear Agent Phillips,

This email will confirm that yesterday, Wednesday December 12, 2012, I examined at our offices two artworks:

1. Julius Lee Settlemyre, Jr. (American 1916-1974). 'Liberation, The Lady.' Signed and dated "J. SETTLEMIRE 1970" lower right; also inscribed "J. Lee Settlemyre" and "J.L. Settlemyre" and with study of woman, all in pencil, verso. Oil on canvasboard. 24 x 20 inches.

According to the information about Settlemyre that you provided me, one document 'attributes' this painting to Settlemyre (as opposed to definitively stating that the painting is an authentic work by Settlemyre and also cites the provenance for this painting, beginning in 1974. This appraiser believes that the present painting is most likely an authentic work by Settlemyre, though is unfamiliar with the artist and his oeuvre. It is worth noting that according to www.askart.com, Settlemyre's paintings have neither been offered nor sold at auction.

Fair market value: $150

2. Photomechanical reproduction of an oil painting, 'Aulus Vitellius, Roman Emperor.' Print on paper laid to foamcore. 23 13/16 x 17 13/16 inches.

The above was presented as a supposed original painting by Titian (Tiziano Vicelli) (Italian c. 1485-1576). This work is not by Titian, is not a painting, is a printed facsimile of a painting, and is modern. A similar, but not identical composition of this subject was painted by Titian is in the English Heritage Collection, Bolsover Castle. This appraiser does not know the origin of the prototype upon which the present work is based, but notes that as a modern photomechanical reproduction, the relevancy of who painted the original work is not important. (It may be noted that seeing this print out of its frame revealed that part of the outer edges of the print had small parts of the gilded frame reproduced, along with the image itself – further proof that this work is a reproduction, the outer frame 'edges' not carefully cropped).

Fair market value: $50

I certify that the above appraisal amounts constitute a professional opinion of value and is thus not a formal written appraisal.
